I found a stranded marine mammal. What should I do?

- Call the Maine Marine Animal Reporting Hotline immediately at 1-800-532-9551.
- Do not approach the animal. Stay 100 yards (300 feet) away. Help keep other people and pets away.

Can I touch, feed, or move a marine mammal that I find?

- No, it is illegal to touch, feed, or move a marine mammal that you find. This includes live and dead animals.
 - The Marine Mammal Protection Act, enacted October 21, 1972, prohibits feeding, attempting to feed, and harassing marine mammals in the wild.
 - Read the Marine Mammal Protection Act:
www.fws.gov/international/laws-treaties-agreements/us-conservation-laws/marine-mammal-protection-act.html.

What are the risks of handling these animals?

- Diseases can spread between stranded animals, pets, and humans.
- Stranded animals can become aggressive and bite or injure humans and pets.
- Feeding an animal can jeopardize its health and can cause them to become conditioned to receive food from humans.
- Getting too close to a stranded animal can cause the animal stress.
- Disturbing mother/pup pairs can lead to abandonment and death of the pup.
